An Evening Ride to Lee-on-the-Solent

This was a combined group ride, made up from regular Southern members and a few of my mates (who have been doing this for many years).

A pleasant ride down through the Meon Valley took us to Smarts Fish & Chips, in Lee-on-the-Solent. All made the easier for plenty of parking and a glorious view across to the Isle of Wight. We all enjoyed fish and chips while admiring the view and the spectacular sunset. Good company meeting up with Mike, Lesley, Chris and Alison and a couple more of my mates.

A measure of any enjoyable trip is the difficulty in persuading people to start making for home. This was the case. We just about managed to get to the end of the A32 before it officially became dark. Temperatures back through the Meon Valley were hovering around 12 degrees, feels like -12 degrees, in lightweight clothing for journey down. Soon warmed up, a bit, after that, enough to feel comfortable again.

We still enjoy the thrill of riding at night in a group, no traffic, clipping along, and envious of Tail end Charlie watching that long line of tail lights ahead.

Will we ever tire of this motorcycle lark?
